Course description

Qualification Master of Science

Field of study Health care, social services and care services

Course summary The distinguishing feature of the Leiden MSc in Bio-Pharmaceutical Sciences is its research-oriented approach. This research orientation is unique in Europe and enjoys a high international profile.

Course description The major compulsory components are the two research projects, both of which include writing a master's thesis. The major research project must be in one of the disciplines of Systems Pharmacology, and the minor research project preferably in a different discipline of Bio-Pharmaceutical Sciences. Other compulsory components are: a literature study, including writing an essay or thesis, attending two advanced lecture series in disciplines of Bio-Pharmaceutical Sciences, participating in the Scientific Conduct course, and attending twenty lectures and colloquia presented by other master's students in Bio-Pharmaceutical Sciences. For the optional component, the master's student can choose from additional courses or work placements.
