Qualification Certificate

Field of study Economics, commerce, management and accounting

Course summary The PDM program will help you enhance your personal management skills and as such train you how to effectively manage complex capacity building projects to guarantee success every step of the way.

Course description Do you want to learn how to identify and manage stakeholders throughout the project cycle and how to identify, formulate (and manage) complex projects in developing countries, which actually meet the needs of beneficiaries? Do you want to be challenged by colleagues from all over the world to think about the success and fail factors of complex capacity building projects? By exchanging views with a variety of experts in the field of project identification, development and management, our PDM program provides you with insights across the entire project cycle. It helps build crucial project management skills like communication, leadership, team work and negotiation skills and helps you to think critically about some of the current themes in the debate on development projects today. Focusing on the exchange of experiences and best practices from real-life project situations, the interactive PDM program will explore various elements of the project cycle: identification, formulation, planning, implementation, monitoring and reporting, and evaluation.
