Course description

Qualification Certificate

Field of study Humanities, social sciences, communication and arts

Course summary A 3-week programme where students will be challenged to consider what security means at various levels and the role of conflict resolution in day to day life.

Course description The word 'security' is omnipresent in media, politics and daily conversations. But what does it actually mean? What makes one feel secure? And, more importantly, how is security organised in order to improve it and what are effective ways to deal with (violent) conflicts? In other words, in what ways is security governed? This three-week programme will give students an in-depth look into the ways in which thinking and speaking about security have changed over time, and how stakeholders on various levels deal with conflicts and security, ranging from the international arena to the state and from private security companies to communities and individuals. Topics that will be discussed include international security, new wars, human security, "Responsibility to Protect", human rights, national security in a globalising world, cyber security, private security companies, gated communities, and citizens' initiatives in war situations.
